WORST SINNERS, WHO BECAME SAINTS

These saints were notorious sinners.

Their stories remind us there is hope.

The Bible tells us, “for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God” (Romans 3:23). Saints are no exception. We’re all lawbreakers because sin is the violation of God’s law. Sinfulness is the general characteristic of all mankind; we are all guilty before God. We are sinners by nature and by our own acts of transgression. Saints, as we know, were not perfect. They made mistakes during their lifetime and often led public lives of depravity before their hearts were converted. They struggled with the same addictions, the same sins and the same bad habits that weigh us down. They fell down and they got back up. The lives of the saints show us that being holy means being human, not perfect.

St. Augustine:

When Catholics discuss saints Who were once great sinners, the first one that comes to mind is St. Augustine of Hippo and for good reason: as a teenager Augustine abandoned the Catholic faith in which he had been raised by his mother, St. Monica, moved in with a mistress, and together they had a son out of wedlock. Augustine became a well-known orator and studied the pagan philosophies of Plato. Augustine became a Christian at age 32, after having discussions about Christianity with a friend, and hearing a child’s voice telling him to pick up a scroll and read it. This conversion story is one of the most famous. After being baptized in 387, Augustine moved back to his hometown of Tagaste, in North Africa, to found a monastic community and became a monk. In 391, the church at nearby Hippo pressed him to become a priest and five years later, he was made Bishop of Hippo. As a church leader, he became an active pastor, not only for his congregation and diocese, but for his faith.
