WORST SINNERS, WHO BECAME SAINTS

These saints were notorious sinners.

St. Matthew:

Who likes to pay taxes? Well, the same was true for those in ancient Israel. During the first century Romans subcontracted out the job of collecting taxes to private individuals and these tax collectors took the opportunity to extort money as they could from people. Everyone hated them and their greed was well known by all. That is why when Jesus asked Matthew to follow Him; many were astonished by the episode. How could Jesus dine with tax collectors and sinners? Matthew was a changed man after that point, following Jesus closely and writing down everything in what we now call the Gospel of Matthew.

St. Mary of Egypt:

At a young age, Mary ran from home and spent seventeen years as a seductress in the glamorous city of Alexandria during the fourth century. She did not charge for her services, but enjoyed the challenge of seducing young men. She was enthralled with sexual adventure and was led by her passions. Mary later confessed, "There is no mentionable or unmentionable depravity of which I was not their teacher." Feeling compelled to tag along with a group of pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem, she boarded the ship and seduced everyone before reaching their destination. However, while in the Holy City, Mary repented of her sins and was reconciled with the church. She spent the rest of her life as a hermit in the desert and continually fought temptations to turn back to her depravity until God granted her peace of soul.

2 Corinthians 5:17 says, "So whoever is in Christ is a new creation: the old things have passed away; behold, new things have come." When we choose a life of Christ, our lives are changed from the inside out. There is no greater example of this than the lives of some of these saints.
